Hi Swathi – thanks for following up. Given the 7th Circuit denial, we are ready to proceed. As stated before, Cliff is in a multi-week trial. Per our last discussions, I know there were areas on certain topics and areas we asked for more clarity on what the plaintiffs are actually seeking, along with the areas where you're willing to compromise as you had stated below. We are also in discussion with the client to move things along.

We'll circle back with availabilities to lock down a date to confer but given Cliff's schedule it may be after his trial. We'll look out for your correspondence this week.

Thanks,
Amber

Cliff, please provide a date this week to resume our meet and confers. As the Seventh Circuit has denied the request for interlocutory appeal, there can be no further excuse to avoid meeting and conferring. We will also have correspondence to you in the next day regarding areas where we are willing to compromise to move these discussions forward.

Cliff, we still haven't heard from the 7th Circuit and we do not want to delay these discussions any further, given the lack of any discovery stay. We'll request again a follow-up meet and confer, including to understand what (if any) documents and data remain from the pre-merger litigation or whether we need to negotiate production anew for those materials.

If we cannot get a meet and confer on the calendar, we may be forced to move to compel. Please let me know.

Swathi:

Thanks for your email.

Unfortunately, I am tied up all next week and for three weeks thereafter. I have a three-week jury trial starting on May 6 and in witness prep sessions all next week.

Furthermore, we respectfully disagree with your view. Our client does not want us to expend attorney fees meeting and conferring when one of the primary objectives of the interlocutory appeal is to reduce discovery costs to third parties. It is quite possible that there will be a ruling on it by the time my trial is finished.

Thanks, Cliff

Cliff-

We think it still makes sense to continue conferring while we await the 7th Circuit decision. We can certainly agree to hold off on any document productions, but there isn't currently a discovery stay, and all of the deadlines remain in effect. We would like to continue meeting and conferring to see if we can resolve or tee up any issues so that, if the 7th Circuit denies the appeal, we have not lost months of time in the discovery schedule.

To that end, can you please let us know your availability to pick up our meet and confer efforts next week?

Subject: RE: TMO - Dish Subpoena M&C

Swathi and Hill:

As you know, today, the Court granted T-Mobile's request to certify its order for an interlocutory appeal (with the Order referring to "burdensome discovery" and the "discovery expense to non-parties), and I understand T-Mobile will be filing an interlocutory appeal.

As you may recall, DISH's first objection to the subpoena in this case was: "DISH objects to the Subpoena on the grounds that it is premature at this stage of the litigation. Defendant T-Mobile's motion [ECF No. 120] to certify the Court's Order [ECF No. 114] for interlocutory appeal remains pending, and that motion, if granted, and any appeal stemming therefrom, may obviate the need for the burdensome third-party discovery caused by this Subpoena. DISH will not produce documents in response to this Subpoena unless or until the Court determines that Defendant's motion should not be granted and/or the Court of Appeals makes a determination that the case should move forward past the pleading stage."

Given the Court's Order, until the interlocutory appeal is resolved, we will not be producing any documents or otherwise expending any additional resources in responding to the subpoena. We will not be appearing at any April 1 meet and confer.

Thanks, Cliff
